

Coming Home to North Dakota

Brent Sanford

North Dakota's Lieutenant Governor

In 1994, Brent Sanford left the University of North Dakota with an accounting degree for a career in Phoenix and then Denver.

After 10 years, Sanford decided that it was time to move his family back home to Watford City. Not long after he was elected to the city council and then elected the city's mayor.

Today as lieutenant governor, Sanford works to diversify the state's economy, create long lasting jobs, and generate opportunities for citizens to flourish and succeed in North Dakota.

Come home and find the good life in
North Dakota, visit ExperienceND.com/UND

A Note from Governor Doug Burgum and First Lady Kathryn Burgum

North Dakota is a great place to be right now. Did you know that we've been named the best state for entrepreneurs, the best state for young adults, and the best state to raise a family? Plus, as alumni, you already know we have some of the best higher-education institutions.

What may be different since you last called North Dakota home is that our state is now full of great job opportunities. There is a lot of room for growth here and we need people like you, and your families, to be a part of our healthy, vibrant communities and provide the talent we need for a 21st century workforce.

As Governor, First Lady Kathryn and I personally invite you to return to our great state and find the good life, right here in North Dakota.

Doug + Kathryn Burgum

The #1 State in the Nation to Call Home

- #1 Shortest average commute time
- #1 Best state for young adults
- #1 Youngest state in U.S.
- #1 Best-run state
- #1 Best state for entrepreneurship
- #1 Lowest unemployment rate

Come home and find the good life in North Dakota, visit ExperienceND.com/UND

North Dakota
LEGENDARY